A black and white illustration of two men in TWG Tea uniforms. The man on the left is wearing a traditional Chinese-style uniform with a high collar and a small hat, and is holding a large, fluffy object. The man on the right is wearing a Western-style uniform with a peaked cap and a jacket with buttons. Both uniforms have a circular patch on the sleeve that says "TWG TEA". They are both holding a large, rectangular sign that contains a quote and the author's name. The sign is held up by two long poles.

“Under certain circumstances, there are few hours in life more agreeable than the hour dedicated to the ceremony known as afternoon tea. From five o’clock to eight is on certain occasions a little eternity; but on such an occasion as this the interval could be only an eternity of pleasure.”

Henry James, The Portrait of a Lady
